1973 flood was severe; generalizations about flood plains ignore the fact that Quad-Cities easily withstood record river height

Severity of the 1973 flood is shown by the Mississippi River creat of 43.31 feet, which compares with 42 feet in the year 1785 and 41.3 feet in 1844. Precisely because of the rarity as well as the severity, the damage and suffering of this spring must not be minimized.

Positive aspects are hard to find minimized.

Positive aspects are hard to find, athough one certainly is the triumph of the human equation. People of all walks of life gave unstintingly of their time and energy to ease the burden of victims and energy to ease the burden of victims and energy to ease the burden of the property of the

Nevertheless, the sweeping generalizations of some of the flood of 100-years-late. It told you so? speakers is causing resentment at them as well as at Mother Nature.

Genald McLindon Design at Louissina the Midwest of the School Carell McLindon Design at Louissina State University, speaking in St. Louis April 27 at an American Institute of Interior Designers regional conference, said helping flood victims move back into the ir homes is "subsidizing sturidity." The question is why we have ever permitted yeopole to build in the flood plains in the first place. Now would be the time to move them to a more suitable environment. Dr. Luna Lespold, senior research bydrologist with the U.S. Geological Survey, came the St. Louis April 26 to address the Codition for the Environ-theoder of the Codition of the Environ-theoder of the Codition of the Service of California at Berkeley.

This is not, a big flood, "he contended, adding ominously, "compared to what were likely to get."

Solven and the survey of the said of the said he thinks levees are built too close to the margin of safely and commented that, since 1950, North America has been "swinging into a wet period."

Dr. Leopold partised floods as "comefinery expansion here is timely
